Spending too much time on hiring?

Recruiting and retaining the right people results in operational success

The administrative cost and time commitment of recruiting and screening top candidates can be a burden on any organization. In today's economy, finding the best talent is becoming more and more challenging as budget cuts, recruitment costs and retention remain the main issues facing HR managers.

Skilled talent for administrative jobs has always been difficult to source, hire and retain. Many organizations—whether for normal recruiting purposes or short-term, mission-critical projects—lack the resources to effectively handle the entire recruiting process in-house. The cost of advertising for quality employees online and in local newspapers, and the time involved in sorting through hundreds of candidate resumes, can negatively impact the bottom line.
